Foster Dulles telephoned me this morning from New York to say that General Eisenhower had received a letter from Mossadegh expressing the hope that the United States would not join the British in causing trouble in Iran. He read me the General's proposed reply, which seemed [redacted] good.

There was a slew of telegrams from London and Tehran on how the negotiations are progressing.

Tonight we had a dinner for the Ronald Trees, [redacted] the Danish Ambassador and his wife, and the Eric Sevareids.
